

The Birds

Birdsong was always in the air at Greenhayes, and William Blake's enchanting dialogue between The Birds seemed a natural choice. In alternating verses the utterances of the male bird are portrayed in the lower range of the solo voice and those of the female bird in the higher range, while the flute adds to the ring of bird calls.